SEC. 3. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

- (1) Welfare reform has reduced the welfare caseload but has failed to move families out of poverty. More than 40 percent of former welfare recipients continued to live below the poverty line in 1999. Employed former recipients earn a median hourly wage of $7.15. Because challenges to economic opportunity and well-being are not adequately addressed by current welfare programs, existing law must be changed to ensure that welfare policy effectively promotes the reduction of poverty.

(2) Between 1995 and 1999, a strong economy reduced poverty by about 2 percent. Reductions in Government transfer payments during this period, however, eliminated almost all of the antipoverty effectiveness of economic growth. Prior to welfare reform, between 1993 and 1995, Government transfer payments had produced the opposite effect, reducing poverty among American families.

(3) About $\frac{1}{3}$ of people who have left welfare say they have had to cut the size of meals or skip meals because they did not have enough food in the house.

(4) Over 40 percent of welfare leavers report that they have had trouble paying housing and utility bills since leaving welfare.

(5) Since welfare reform was enacted in 1996, and despite a strong economy, there have been sharp increases in the rates at which single mothers with children have had to rely on food pantries and homeless shelters.

(6) An estimated $\frac{1}{3}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ of all families leaving welfare for work do not receive medical assistance, food stamps, or child care to which they are entitled.

(7) Only 1,500,000 of the 9,900,000 children who are eligible for child care subsidies under their States' eligibility guidelines receive child care assistance.

(8) Between 1997 and 1999, over 500,000 families were sanctioned off welfare and these families have been more likely to experience poverty than have other families leaving welfare. On a variety of measures, families who have been sanctioned off welfare tend to fare worse than other leavers.

(9) States in which African Americans make up a higher proportion of recipients are statistically more likely to adopt full-family sanctions. African American recipients are statistically more likely than white recipients to participate in a TANF program that employs full-family sanctions. African-American families have, in fact, been sanctioned more frequently than their white counterparts.

(10) States in which African Americans make up a higher proportion of recipients are statistically more likely to adopt family cap policies. African American recipients are statistically more likely than white recipients to participate in a TANF program that employs a family cap policy.

(11) States in which African Americans make up a higher proportion of recipients are statistically more likely to adopt time limits shorter than the Federal Government requires. Approximately $\frac{2}{3}$ of all families that will exhaust their allowable time on welfare are families of color.

(12) Overall, 78 percent of children with immigrant parents are themselves born in the United States and are therefore eligible for services if poor. Nearly $\frac{1}{4}$ of all children of immigrants live in poor families and 23 percent of all poor children in the United States are either first- or second-generation immigrants. Immigrants whose children are eligible for public benefits often don't know about the services, are afraid to access them, or are incorrectly turned away.

(13) About 25 percent of former welfare recipients have no paid employment and have either no partner or a partner who is unemployed.

(14) Under welfare reform, single mothers have been forced to work at unsafe and hazardous job sites and to be subject to sexual harassment and racial discrimination.

(15) Most single mothers who leave welfare for work do not earn enough in wages to lift their families out of poverty, even several years after leaving welfare. 55 percent remain poor 1 year after leaving welfare; 49 percent 3 years after and 42 percent 5 years after. Only about $\frac{1}{3}$ of all leavers have incomes above 150 percent of the poverty line years after going off welfare.

(16) Adolescent children of single mothers who have left welfare for work have school performance rates below those of other low-income children. Early studies of families in welfare-to-work programs in Florida, Minnesota, and Canada have found unexpected evidence that their adolescent children have lower academic achievement and more behavioral problems than the children of other welfare households. The researchers hypothesized that parents in the programs might have less time and energy to monitor their adolescents' behavior once they were employed; that under the stress of working, they might adopt harsher parenting styles; or that the adolescents' assuming more responsibilities at home when parents got jobs was creating too great a burden.

(17) Under welfare reform, when families lost income regardless of the reason, children were more likely to experience bad outcomes such as increased school suspensions, behavior and mental health problems including symptoms of depression, an increase in the number of children removed from their mother's care, increased enrollment in special classes for behavioral or emotional problems, and health problems such as increased trips to the emergency room. In programs where both employment and income were increased, the impact on children was more positive.

(18) Most single mothers on welfare who are eligible for the exemption from cooperating in establishing paternity are not made aware of this option.

(19) 35 percent of low-income families reported mental health problems according to a 1999 study. Similar rates of mental health problems have been found among welfare recipients. Among California welfare program participants, more than $\frac{1}{3}$ had at least 1 diagnosable mental health problem in the previous 12 months, and about 20 percent had 2 or more. Nationally, between 70 and 90 percent of working-age adults with serious mental health problems are unemployed. According to a 2001 study, major depression significantly decreases the likelihood that a woman receiving welfare will be employed and the presence of 1 or more of 4 psychiatric disorders increases the likelihood of receiving cash assistance by 32 percent.

(20) Over half of women receiving welfare have been victims of domestic violence as adults. According to several studies, a quarter to a third of welfare recipients report having been abused within the last year. Abusive partners often interfere with women’s attempts to work or to obtain education.
